Mergers and acquisitions are pivotal strategies for companies aiming to grow, diversify, or gain competitive advantage. While often used interchangeably, they have distinct meanings:

Defining Mergers and Acquisitions

- Mergers: The combination of two companies into a single entity, often with mutual consent and comparable size.
- Acquisitions: One company purchasing another, which may involve a takeover or buyout, often resulting in the acquired company becoming a subsidiary or being absorbed.

Understanding these distinctions is fundamental, as each involves different strategic, legal, and financial considerations.

The Strategic Rationale Behind M&A

Companies pursue M&A for various reasons:

- Expanding market share
- Diversifying product offerings
- Achieving economies of scale
- Gaining access to new technologies or markets
