Initially, sunlight strikes the solar panels, which consist of photovoltaic cells that convert solar energy into direct current (DC) electricity. This DC electricity then flows into an inverter, which transforms it into alternating current (AC), suitable for household and industrial use.

Subsequently, the AC electricity is transferred to a control unit that monitors and regulates the power output. From there, the electricity is transmitted via cables to the electricity grid, ready for distribution to homes and businesses.

This process exemplifies a renewable energy method that harnesses sunlight to produce clean, sustainable electricity with minimal environmental impact.
